A HOUSE CREATED

An Old World aesthetic characterized designer Arlene Critzos' former custom estate home near Annapolis. In the formal living room (pictured), a neutral palette offset furnishings and art from different periods and countries; highlights included an oversized 18th-century sofa upholstered in caramel velvet and silk. Enormous windows overlooked Whitehall Creek. Architecture: Riegel Design Studio. Interior Design: Interior Concepts, Inc. Contractor: Lundberg Builders. GORDON BEALL, 2006.

VAULTED MODERNISM Nestled amid Cleveland Park Victorians, a mid-century house designed in 1960 by the late I.M. Pei stands out for its unique architecture: three barrel vaults overlooking a backyard pool (pictured). When new owners purchased the house, they tapped architect Hugh Newell Jacobsen for a careful update that would respect Pei's original design while improving modern-day functionality. Renovation Architecture: Hugh Newell Jacobsen, Architect. Landscape Architecture: Graham Landscape Architecture. BOB NAROO, 2008.

HIDDEN GEM Hired to transform an outmoded 1950s split-level in DC's Forest Hills, Nestor Santa-Cruz embraced modern design principles, opening the house up to nature via enlarged windows and doors and creating flow between rooms. In the dining room (pictured), casual and formal elements blend with Directoire seating punctuated by Philippe Starck Ghost chairs and a Mondrian-esque ceiling treatment. Bleached-wood floors unify the spaces. Interior Design: Nestor Santa-Cruz Decoration. ANGIE SECKINGER, 2015.
